Phone Scams

Phone scams come in many forms, but they tend to make similar promises and threats, or ask you to pay certain ways.

Here's how to recognize a phone scam:

- There is no prize. If you have to pay to get the prize, it's not a prize.
- You won't be arrested. Real law enforcement and federal agencies won't call and threaten you.
- You don't need to decide now. Most legitimate businesses will give you time to think their offer over and get written information about it before asking you to commit.
- There is never a good reason to send cash or pay with a gift card. Scammers will often ask you to pay in a way that make it hard for you to get your money back like wiring money, putting money on a gift card, prepaid card, or using a money transfer app.
- Government agencies aren't calling to confirm your sensitive information.

Examples of common phone scams:

- Imposter scams - A scammer pretends to be someone you trust like a government agency such as the Social Security Administration or the IRS, a family member, or someone claiming there is a problem with your computer. The scammer may even have a fake name or number show up on your caller ID to convince you.
- Extended Car Warranties - Scammers find out what kind of car you drive and when you bought it so they can urge you to buy overpriced or even worthless service contracts.

What you should do:

- Hang up - When you get a robocall, don't press any numbers and hang up! Instead of letting you speak to a live operator or remove you from their call list, it might lead to more robocalls.
- Don't trust your caller ID - Scammers can make any name or number show up on your caller ID. That's called spoofing. So even if it looks like a government agency or a call from a local number, it could be a scammer calling from anywhere.

Report phone scams:

- If you have lost money to a phone scam or have information on a scammer who called you, report it at www.ftc.gov/complaint.
- If you didn't lose money and just want to report a call, you can use the reporting form at www.donotcall.gov.
